Free NHL Pick: (Jan 23) Kings vs Blues Prediction & Lines

This is a battle of two teams that are all over the board. The St. Louis Blues are trying to reach Stanley Cup stardom again after winning it just two years ago to make the most out of their championship window.

However they are on a roller coaster ride out of the game with a winning record to their name but a blowout loss to the Avalanche and a home loss to an average San Jose Sharks team must have them questioning what their issues are on both sides of the ice.

Meanwhile the Kings have finally righted their ship it seems by getting in the win column for the first time against the Avalanche last game after dropping three straight including their first two games in overtime. Now both teams will really try and use this game as a kickoff their seasons to either keep their change of luck going or figure out what team they will be for the rest of the year.

Kings at Blues: Projected starting goalies

Jonathan Quick (1-0-2, 3.18 GAA, .897 SV%) at Jordan Binnington (2-1-1, 2.67 GAA, .913 SV%)

Quick is rebounding from a terrible season in 2019-20. He suffered a pair of overtime setbacks against the Minnesota Wild to open the season before posting a win against the Colorado Avalanche Thursday. Quick was 0-2-0 with a 4.08 goals against average and .871 save percentage in two meetings with the Blues last season.

Binnington has been up and down so far, and he is coming off a 2-1 shootout loss against the San Jose Sharks Wednesday. Even though he didn't win, it was his finest outing of the season. He went 2-0-0 with a 1.50 GAA and .954 SV% in two meetings with L.A. last season.
