Who wins Kentucky vs. LSU?

Kentucky vs. LSU odds, line: 2021 college basketball picks, Jan. 23 predictions from proven computer model

After starting conference play 3-0, the Kentucky Wildcats have gone back to the way they played at the beginning of the season, losing three straight games in a variety of ways. The latest one was to Georgia in game-winning fashion.

The Cats were up six with about two minutes left, gave up a three, couldn't score a bucket, missed the front-end of a one-and-one and ultimately gave up a layup with three seconds left on the clock.

The only real thing left to play for and give anyone hope is the SEC Tournament. The Cats need to find some kind of offensive flow in order to be successful.

The tweak that Cal made last game couldn't have backfired worse. Dontaie Allen had his worst game of the season, and Davion Mintz was a non-factor for most of the game.

An SEC battle is on tap between the LSU Tigers and the Kentucky Wildcats at 6 p.m. ET on Saturday at Rupp Arena. UK is 4-9 overall and 2-3 at home, while LSU is 10-3 overall and 1-2 on the road. Both teams have a 5-8 mark against the spread this season.

The Wildcats are favored by 1.5 points in the latest Kentucky vs. LSU odds from William Hill Sportsbook, and the over-under is set at 147. Before entering any LSU vs. Kentucky picks, you'll want to see the college basketball predictions from the model at SportsLine.

Anyone who has followed it has seen huge returns.

Now, the model has set its sights on Kentucky vs. LSU. You can head to SportsLine to see its picks. Here are several college basketball odds for LSU vs. Kentucky:

It doesn't get any easier with the Tigers tonight. LSU is 10-3 overall and 5-2 in conference play. They have a few playmakers including Cameron Thomas and Trendon Watford. These two can score with the best of them.

All Cal can do is continue to experiment. BJ Boston had his best game of the season against Georgia, maybe that will continue into the next game.

What do you think? Will the Cats get back in the winning column or lose their fourth straight?
